

Freedom — Country con Fusion (2007)

....almost has the feel of an acoustic album set to electric guitar. It's sweet, liquid-blues with a kind of a high-lonesome feel to the songwriting-- mostly Stuart's. Can you express tough, independent feelings with a gentle touch? The answer here is yes.
Jim White, Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.com, August 2007

Live At The Triple Door — Country con Fusion (2005)

...Alice Stuart is a soulful country singer who plays a mean blues guitar...Backed by a five-piece band that kicks the footlights out, Stuart sings with a power and honesty that is dusty as the road and warm as a home fire. Bill White, Seattle P.I.

Can't Find No Heaven — Burnside Records, June 2002

"Records rarely stop me in my tracks and leave me speechless. This is such a jaw dropper...Stuart soars through 11 exquisite cuts that equally showcase her formidable acoustic and electric guitar work."

Mark Gallo, Blues Bytes, Aug 2002

Crazy With the Blues — Country con Fusion 1999

... a critic's favorite... it's both a thrill and a treat to have Stuart back."

Paul-Emile Comeau, Dirty Linen, June/July 2000

Really Good — Country con Fusion, 1996

Alice's folk/blues collaboration with bassist Prune Rooney helped re-establish her presence on the music scene. Alice and Prune quickly ascended to venues like Strawberry Music Festival and California World Music Festival.

Believing — Fantasy Records, vinyl, 1972

Includes guest appearance by the Tower of Power horn section. Alice's cover of Hank Snow's Golden Rocket made in onto the British pop charts.

Fulltime Woman — Fantasy Records, vinyl, 1970

...a major talent... her lyrics are evocative but not maudlin, simple but not banal...she makes the blues rub shoulders with classical, Cajun and rag."

Eric Park, Rolling Stone, 1971

All The Good Times — Arhoolie (vinyl) 1964 (re-released on CD)

A beautiful new female voice is now on the folk horizon. Its owner's name is Alice Stuart. She sings with a clean freshness that is exciting in its simplicity.

A folk find!" Billboard Magazine, 1964
